

Larry Bawden,
Jadoo Power
Systems

Jadoo Power Systems Inc.

Designs and manufactures portable hydrogen-fuel-cell power storage and generation products for law enforcement, military and news-gathering applications.
Prosper, May 2006

Right moves:

"Armed with venture capital and the imprimatur that recognition brings within the technology sector, Jadoo is primed to achieve ambitious sales and revenue goals."
— James Kitchel

Still compelling?

"We're going to continue to see good things coming out of Jadoo. Who knows? Maybe they'll be the region's first publicly held clean-tech HQ."
— Oleg Kaganovich

Andy Beal, MaxPreps

JiWire Inc.

Specialist in wireless internet communication with its SpotLock data encryption-security technology and database of 100,000 "hotspot" locations.
Prosper, June 2006

Right moves:

"JiWire has reinforced its position as the industry standard for how to find WiFi hotspots, connect to them and secure those connections."
— Scott Lenet

Still compelling?

"The number of people using broadband-wireless services on laptops, PDAs and cell phones is growing exponentially. Protecting wireless-data transmissions will only become a more pressing issue over time."
— Oleg Kaganovich

Kevin
McKenzie,
JiWire

MaxPreps Inc.

While ESPN covers pro and college sports, MaxPreps is emerging as the national source for high school sports information.
Prosper, July 2006

Right moves:

"MaxPreps has advanced the football to within field goal range while the competition is still looking for a playbook. Domination of the prep sports space could be the trophy MaxPreps takes to the locker room."
— James Kitchel

Missed the mark:

"MaxPreps is driven by the school calendar and really needs to hustle in the off-season to launch new markets and features. Since my son's a track star, my only quibble is that they don't yet cover track and field."
— Steve Niian

Still compelling?

"They continue to work well with their venture and angel investors and are hitting the benchmarks they laid out 12 and 18 months ago."
— Jim McCarthy
